Donald is the founder/CEO of a small coffee delivery startup who wants the development of his app to be completed with reasonable time and resources. He may want to glance at high-level stats and reports concerning how much revenue his app is generating to get a general idea of how well the company is doing.

Ben is a project manager and wants his developers to be able to quickly and easily progress through projects using existing APIs, tools, and frameworks to keep the project on-time and under-budget.

Jerry is a development manager and knows of several kinds of payment processors. He wants to use the one that does what the project requires, and also the easiest to use and learn.

Jack is the lead developer who uses several APIs and SDKs in his various projects. He likes ones that are easily searchable and have a sandbox to try code out because they require the least time and effort to use.

Diane is a QA who assures the quality of work completed by quickly and easily accessing reference materials like API documentation, examples, and best practices.
